For most of the options you can choose either 'all of' or 'any of'. If you select 'all of', you will search for documents that include all of the words. For example if I type 'teaching children' in the box next to Title, documents with both words in their titles will appear in my search results, but not documents that have 'teaching' but not 'children' in their titles.

If you select 'any of', you will search for documents that contain any of the words you type. For example if I type 'teaching children' in the box next to Title, my search results will include documents that have 'teaching' in the title, 'children' in the title or both.

Near the bottom you can choose between 'all of these conditions' or 'any of these conditions'. If I choose 'any of these conditions', and type 'teaching' next to Title and 'Williams' next to Authors, I will get search results either with 'teaching' in the title or 'Williams' as the author or both.

The simple search page uses 'all of' or 'any of' as well.
